

The Human Ecology Department Presents

The Effects of Oil Industry Dynamics on International Climate Change Advocacy ENGOs: Elite Support as Political Opportunity or Liability?

A Seminar with Simone Pulver
of the Watson Institute for International Studies at Brown University

December 10th, 2008
Cook Campus Blake Hall Room 131
12:35 p.m. to 2:00 p.m.

Pulver has a joint appointment as an assistant professor of environmental studies in Brown's Center for Environmental Studies. She also holds an appointment as an adjunct assistant professor of sociology at Brown.

Her current research investigates the participation of developing-country firms in India and Brazil in the Kyoto Protocol's Clean Development Mechanism and the use of scenarios in global environmental governance. In the past, her work has focused on the roles played by transnational oil corporations and transnational environmental advocacy NGOs in the UN climate negotiations. She is finalizing a book manuscript on this topic, tentatively titled "Private Interest versus Public Debate: Two Logics of Influence in the Global Climate Change Negotiations, 1991-2005."

For Questions and Further Information Contact Kristen Drusjack
drusjack@aesop.rutgers.edu or 732-932-9153 ext 301